Marriage in China.

HOW THE BRIDE IS DELIVERED TO THE GROOM AND HOW HE MAKES HER HIS WIFE. [From the New York Sun.]

On the wedding-day the guests assemble in the bridegroom's house. Then a pro-cession is formed, consisting of friends, bands of music, and sedan chairs decorated in red and gold, with bearers in red coats, and dressed in a sort of livery, sometimes wearing red caps. The procession starts from the house with a courier at the head. He bears a large piece of pork on a tray, to keep off malicious demons who may be lurking on the street-corners and in the alleys. These demons are supposed to tackle the pork, and while they are thus builed the procession passes on without being affected by their evil inbrella, is placed on her head. It comes

I suppose he turns it over to the bride-groom on reaching his house. The procession returns with more care and more by which it was to be justified before the style. I saw one during a ramble in a Chinese town. As the bride was borne past us we gave her three cheers. I dare say her children will be either knockkneed or bow-legged because of the cheers of the barbarians. Good luck to the poor bottled-up one. She had the best wishes

Interesting History of a Sword. [Atlanta correspondence of the Macon Telegraph.]
I presume hundreds of people visit the Executive office at the capitol without seeing or noticing the magnificent sword sus-pended on the wall. I saw it for the first time a day or two ago, and this morning Judge John D. Stewart and Judge Alexander Erwin had their first view of it. It is a magnificent sword, and has a notable of his gallantry. For some cause the sword was not ready for presentation until some years after, and when the gallant Georgian had been gathered to his fathers. When the sword was ready Governor Rabun addressed a special message to the Legisla-ture on the subject asking for a proper disposition of the memorial. That Legislature, in a beautiful resolution recounting the distinguished services of Colonel Appling, his death, and the fact that there were no male heirs to his fame and decided that the State fortune, decided that the State was the fitting guardian of the fame of so distinguished a son, and en-acted that the sword should be preserved in the Executive Department of the State. And so it has hung in the Executive office sixty-five years, nearly three-quarters of a century, with the exception of the closing period of the war, when the faithful old Peterson Thweatt bore it away in safety till it could be safely returned. The sword was made in Philadelphia in 1817, at a cost of $1,200. The hilt and scabbard are heavily mounted in solid gold, the blade is of the finest steel, and on one side is engraved the presentation, now so dim what the rust and stains of years that it can scarcely be deciphered. Over the sword suspended is a frame containing the printed copy of the special message of Governor Rabun and the legislative resolution. Colonel Daniel Appling was born lution. Colonel Daniel Appling was born August 25, 1787; died March 18, 1818. He entered the United States army when eighteen years old. INDEPENDENCE DAY.

VIRGINIA'S PORTION IN ACHIEVING THE INDEPENDENCE OF THE AMERI-CAN COLONIES.

How the Day Will be Celebrated In and About Richmond-Pic-Nics and Parades-Notes and Notions

Our people are slowly resuming the observance of the Fourth of July, and per-haps in the not distant future it will be reverenced as it was before the war be-tween the sections. The following extract from the address of Hon. Robert C. Winthrop, delivered before the City Council and citizens of Boston July 4, 1876, shows what lot and part Virginia had in framing the Declaration and prosecuting the struggle for independence to a successful termi-nation, and is so full of appreciation and fraternal feeling that it cannot fail to be pleasant reading to our people. Mr. Win-throp, in the course of his address, said: Single out with me, as you easily will at the first glance, by a presence and a stature not easily overlooked or mistaken, the young, ardent, accomplished Jefferson. He is only just thirty-three years of age. Charming in conversation, ready and full in counsel, he is "slow of tongue," like the great Law-giver of the Israelites, for any public discussion or formal discourse. But he has brought with him the reputation of wielding what John Adams well called "a masterly pen." And grandly has he justified that reputation. Grandly has he employed that pen already, in drafting a paper which is at this moment lying on the table and awaiting its final signature and continue of the state of the sta sanction. Three weeks before, indeed-on the previous 7th of June-his own noble colleague, Richard Henry Lee, had moved the resolution, whose adoption, on the 2d of July, had virtually settled the whole question.

Nothing certainly more explicit or emphatic could have been wanted for that Congress itself than that resolution, setting forth as it did in language of striking fluence. All this time the bride is at her simplicity and brevity and dignity "that own house, arraying herself in her best these United Colonies are, and of right dress and richest jewels. Her hair is bound up and arranged in due form and that they are absolved from all allegiance style by a skilled matron. After this her to the British crown, and that all political head-dress is donned. But the form in which that resolution was to be announced and preclaimed to the people of the Colonies, and the reasons terest and of momentous importance. No graver responsibility was ever devolved upon a young man of thirty-three, if, indeed, upon any man of any age, than that of preparing such a paper. As often as I have examined the original draft of that bottled-up one. She had the best wishes of all our party, as we followed the procession for some squares, to the great satonishment of all the Chinamen on the astonishment of all the Chinamen on the street.

As the procession approached the bridegroom's door a band stationed there struck up a tune, and fire-crackers were let off by the box until the bride gate. The go-between then got the key from the bridegroom and opened the door of the sedan-chair. As the bride alighted she was saiuted by a small child at the voung Jefferson is not alone.

The county authorities of Augusta intend to institute a prosecution against Mr. Beirne and Mr. Elam, but have not hurried the matter for the reason that they did not know the whereabouts of Mr. Beirne and knew that Mr. Elam would not be able to appear in court for a week or more.

It is represented that in and about Staunton the opinion is that the prosecution will not be more successful in this case than it It is understood that at the first round
